N.H. Smith's Letters from Sabine Pass, 1863

Alwyn Barr

Follow this and additional works at: http://scholarworks.sfasu.edu/ethj
Part of the United States History Commons
Tell us how this article helped you.

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://scholarworks.sfasu.edu/ethj/vol4/iss2/10
Sabine Pass, which separates the coasts of Texas and Louisiana and provides access to the Sabine and the Neches rivers, was a pivotal point throughout the American Civil War. The Texas Secession Convention voted to fortify the pass in March, 1861. A local citizens’ committee soon thereafter erected temporary works and provided the first artillery for the post, two antiquated twelve-pounders. A battalion of Confederate troops was raised by Lieutenant Colonel James B. Likens in 1861 for defense of the pass, and was reorganized in 1862 under Lieutenant Colonel Ashley W. Spaight. Confederate control continued until the fall of 1862, when a yellow fever epidemic and inadequate artillery forced the garrison to spike its guns and retreat before Federal warships which entered the pass. In January, 1863, a surprise attack by improvised Confederate cottonclad gunboats captured two Union blockaders off Sabine Pass and regained control of the estuary.¹

Major General John B. Magruder, commander of the Confederate military district of Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona, then sent his engineers to lay out new defenses for the protection of the pass. New works were drawn up and heavier cannon were brought in by Colonel Valery Sulakowski and Major Getulius Kellersberger. Once construction was underway, its completion was left to Lieutenant N. H. Smith who arrived in early August to assume command of a detachment of heavy artillery, formerly sappers and miners, which had been on temporary engineering duty at Sabine Pass since May, 1863.² They were probably assisted by the garrison and possibly by slave labor.

Before the project was finished, a Federal invasion force appeared on September 7. In the battle of Sabine Pass which followed on September 8, Lieutenant Dick Dowling assigned Smith to command the section of thirty-two-pounders in the fort’s six-gun battery. The Confederate cannoneers then proceeded to disable and capture two Union gunboats while driving the remainder of the invasion fleet out to sea. In his report, Dowling said that Smith, “by his coolness and bravery, won the respect and admiration of the whole command.” Following the victory, Magruder concentrated additional troops in the area, and Sulakowski and Kellersberger made extensive improvements and additions to the fortifications at the pass.³

Naturally, Smith from time to time wrote to his commanding officer in Galveston, Captain M. G. Howe, both before and after the battle. Four of the lieutenant’s letters have been preserved in the Howe Collection in the Archives of the University of Texas Library. Although Smith left no account of the battle itself, the letters provide a sometimes humorous suggestion of conditions at Sabine Pass in August and September, 1863.

Smith's spelling has been changed only in the case of proper names, since it is otherwise generally understandable. Periods and commas have been added to clarify his statements since he used almost no punctuation. All changes are in brackets.

Engineers Office
Sabine Pass Aug 26/63

Capt M G Howe
Commdg Sappers and Miners

Dear Capt

Yours of the 15th came to hand Two days Since and Should have been answered byt that I awated this opportunity[.]. If the name of [Sergeant F.] Weinberg does not appear on the power of attourney sent you it is verry Strange for I was sure he had Signed, his intention was to have signed— I have payed the whole party here nine in num­ber for two months Extra duty amounting to forty five Dols pr man for all except Weinberg and him I paid fifty one which I think you will find correct by the Rolls of last month[.]

I send Corp [August] Pau[t]che after clothing for the detachment here[.] you will please furnish him, some of the men are naked and others barefooted[,] all want something[.]

Yours Truly
N H Smith
Lt Hvy Art on Eng
Service and in chg Sabine

Eng Office
Sabine Pass Aug 26th/63

Capt M G Howe

Dear Capt

You will please send me by Corp Pau[t]che one of my horses[.] I would prefer you sent the mustang unless Capt Kossy wishes to buy him at the price I offered Say $250.00[,] in case you send him let the Capt use the sorell, the musquetoes are so bad here that it is almost impossible for a man or horse to live and I do not wish to have the sorel suffer if I can prevent it[.] if Capt Kossy wants the mustang send the other and oblige[.]

Your True friend
N H Smith

I wish to God you would relieve me at this place[.]

Head Qr Army Musquetoes
Sabine Pass Aug 26th/63

Capt M G Howe

You will perceive my letter is from the general Hd Qr of this post[.] would to God that I had not been so much honored but it is two late[.] I should you unfortunately be obliged to stick your nose out from under the bar after the sun goes down you can then have a practical demonstration of what I mean[,] in otherwords should it ever be your misfortune to be sent to this accursed of all places bring with you a bar sufficiently larg for you to lay with your feet strachted out for I am just out of bed and my feet are so badly swolen that I can hardly wear a shoe— I am here Capt for God knows how long[.] you Know what it is to finish up a piece of work like this and have no material to do it with[.] I have the quarters of the troops to build yet[,] some where near one Thousand feet of piling to drive[,] the fort to palisade[,] four Guns yet to Mount with God Knows how much more[,] to commce with I have not one pile[,] about fifty palisades[,] no lumber for quarters[,] with an order just recvd to send the best man Corp [George] Rube to Niblets Bluff[,] oh curse the Luck[,] I wish I was back in Galveston— Write me by Pau[tch] and give me all the news[.]”

Your friend (in suffering)*
N H Smith

*My hands are blistered writing this letter[.] allow for the imagination[.] Capt. M G Howe
Sappers and Miners
Capt
You will please send me to this place by first safe opport­unity four suits of clothing for our men at this place as I had that number Stolen during the late engagement[.] Eng Office
Sabine Pass Sept 16th 1863

Respectfully Yours
N H Smith
Lt Sappers and Miners

P S
This place is hell[,] I wish you were here to help me[,] I have none and the Col [Sulakowski] is in more of a hurry than he was in Gal­veston in Feby— I am working now about 18 hours in 24[.] Your Sincere friend
N H Smith

(Write me a long friendly letter)

FOOTNOTES

The number 6 was written over the number 3 at this point.

Kellersberger, Memoirs, 31, confirms Smith's constant references to the near plague of mosquitoes in the Sabine Pass area.

Niblett's Bluff, on the Louisiana side of the Sabine River a few miles above Orange, was a major Confederate supply center for goods being sent from Texas to the Southern troops in Louisiana.

This is perhaps the only statement of Confederate preparedness written in the days immediately preceding the battle. Apparently only the four cannon were mounted in the interval before September 8, 1863. V. Sulakowski to J. Kellersberg, October 5, 1863, Official Records, Series I, Vol. XXVI, Pt. 2, 298-299.

Sulakowski also had been in charge of the construction of fortifications in Galveston after the recapture of the port city by Magruder on January 1, 1863.